

Program Overview

What health care providers should know.

About Open Payments

Open Payments is a national disclosure program from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) that promotes a more financially transparent and accountable health care system.

Pharmaceutical and medical device manufacturers must report to CMS their payments or transfers of value to covered recipients for research, meals, travel, gifts, speaking fees, and more.

Through Open Payments, CMS makes this data available to the public. On OpenPaymentsData.CMS.gov, anyone can search for health care providers and see the payments they received, when they received them, and the companies that made the payments.

Just because financial ties are reported in Open Payments does not mean anyone has done anything wrong. Open Payments does not identify which payments are beneficial or which may cause conflicts of interests.

What Covered Recipients Can Do

- Register for Open Payments at portal.cms.gov.
- Review, affirm and, if necessary, dispute data reported about you each spring.
- If a patient asks, answer questions and provide more information about the payments to you.
- Be familiar with the program.
- Tell your colleagues about Open Payments.
